

Rather than investing money in BPL, our power companies should be investing in their infrastructure to provide reliable power generation and transmission.

BPL is neither necessary nor smart. I want reliable, inexpensive electrical power, not internet to my toaster. BPL only gives the power company executives another reason to divert funds from much needed upgrades to the Countries Power Infrastructure.

The fact that BPL is still even being considered, after all the corruption exposed in the energy sector, over the last 3 years, means it is most likely only going to benefit the energy companies, and not their customers.

I for one will proudly vote against this administration in November, and hope that it results in the removal of the politically appointed cronies which the FCC now consists of.
